In other words, when you see the cropping window, you're ready to crop your image; your preview should look like Figure 7-2. The entire image preview area is active. The tool's handle is active, and a virtual crop box should appear around the edges of your preview. For best results, close all your other image windows and rearrange your Workspace so you have plenty of room for the image to be scaled and cropped. You'll learn more about image windows in the next section. Figure 7-2. The Crop tool appears in the upper-right corner of the image preview. The tool's handle changes color when you move your mouse over it. The preview itself shows the entire image. 4. Click and drag the active crop box around the edges of the image to cut out a smaller, cropped
