What's New in the AutoIt?

AutoIt:Automatic Application Interface Technology (AutoIt) is a scripting language designed to make it easy to automate tasks in a Windows environment. It allows you to automate windows, mouse movement and keystrokes, creating applications that can be used without any knowledge of programming. It is particularly useful for new programmers who do not want to be bothered with the complexities of low-level programming. In the above video we show you how to use a simple script to automate the login process for an Access database. In this case we use the name and password of the database's owner, but we could just as easily have passed the username and password of the user as parameters to the script, instead of hard-coding the values. The real power of AutoIt comes when you start to integrate the result of the script into a larger application. For example, we could run the above script in conjunction with a command-line application which is started when the user logs on to the database. Features:

- AutoIt is a generic application script language, so you can use it to automate any Windows task.
- The language resembles BASIC syntax, but has more sophisticated features that enable the user to perform
