And then there was this from Good Weekend, also in New South Wales: It's a strange thing to have to tell a reporter for a Sydney newspaper but the problem with this story is that the homicide unit has already spoken to the family and the son will not be charged. Incidents of feral violence have been declared and gangs of youths have become a fact of life in this city. The names of the juveniles involved have been given. It is a fact of life that young people are often involved in violent altercations. Unprovoked, and having been shot by a police officer, a 17-year-old boy was arrested and charged with murder. The death of the boy, whose name was not released, came when he was shot by police in Cessnock, in the state's north, in June. He is the son of a senior assistant police commissioner. The boy has been held in custody since his arrest. He has been granted bail, after a brief court appearance during which he denied the charges. It has been two weeks since the middle-aged man was left bleeding at the side of the road 3e33713323
