A Pd-catalyzed indium-mediated annulation reaction of trimethylsilyl-substituted benzofuran and isatine affording indenes and indenyl compounds has been developed. This is the first example of the annulation of trimethylsilyl-substituted benzofuran and isatine. This protocol exhibits high regioselectivity and enables the formation of indenyl and indenyl-oxy compounds.Don't miss out - Subscribe to CBC News to get the latest scoop on the coronavirus pandemic: bit.ly/2MiddleAJ With the new COVID-19 vaccine still at least a year away, the goal of many health-care providers in Saskatchewan and across the country is to help local communities become more resilient to the coronavirus. Well, that may not be happening. On Friday, the Saskatchewan Health Authority's COVID-19 operational teams announced they are moving to a new system which will see them designated in two distinct phases. Phase one begins Monday, March 23 — the day Premier Scott Moe announced he would be keeping in-person school operations in Saskatchewan until at least April 30 — and ends May 31. We want to get through phase one and figure out what we need to prepare for the second part of phase two. - Dr. Deborah Attard, Saskatchewan Health Authority It's not yet clear what the specific criteria will be for the teams to be assigned to each community, though, in general, the teams will be only be responsible for the communities that have declared themselves in public health emergency or have reached a certain population threshold.
