Diabetes and Bone Health: The DiabBone Consortium.

Type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) is associated with increased fracture risk, but the underlying mechanisms remain elusive. Recent analyses of 3 different and distinct studies show that skeletal turnover markers and bone mineral density (BMD) are indeed adversely affected in patients with T2DM, but the reasons remain unclear. In all 3 studies, the fracture rates were similar between T2DM and control groups, suggesting that the increased fracture risk is likely due to other factors such as age, comorbidities, poor glycemic control, etc. Of interest, the data suggest that this increased fracture risk may be greater than previously thought.

Lesions and lesions mimicking aneurysm of the ophthalmic artery: a case report and review of the literature. Aneurysm of the ophthalmic artery is uncommon and a rare cause of ophthalmic ischemia. The authors present a case of an isolated aneurysm of the right ophthalmic artery that mimicked an aneurysm of the left ophthalmic artery, and review of the literature. A 63-year-old man presented with retroorbital pain and vision loss in the right eye. The visual acuity in the right eye was 20/70. The left eye had visual acuity of 20/20. Ophthalmic examination revealed a non-pulsatile pulsatile, palpable round, soft, mobile mass of 4 mm in size in the infraorbital triangle. The lesion showed increased vascularity on Doppler sonography. Computed tomography of the head showed an intraorb
