Longhorn Sidebar is the most commonly used sidebar because of its extensive API and the ability to start applications. LongBar is a more advanced version of Longhorn Sidebar with a variety of benefits over the other sidebar including a more sophisticated development model, better integration into Windows Shell and the addition of a few new tile types. The LongBar UI and API was designed and developed by Eric White in his spare time and is distributed as a free open source project. I have not received any other emails or phone calls about this site, but I will now look at deleting all references to it. The complete code for LongBar application will be placed in the project. In this example I used StreamThief component in my application. StreamThief component is actually a tile. After Tile Wizard creates tile, we need to add an event handler for OnClick event. The OnClick event will be called when user clicks on a tile. StreamThief.OnClick event is called when user clicks on the tile. As we used StreamThief component for tile, the user can open StreamThief in the context menu for the item that has the StreamThief tile.
