Version: 2.9 License: Free Developer: Lab of OxygenBlur File size: 4.55 MB The Password Trapper was developed to help you remember passwords. It displays the saved passwords in a grid that can be customized. You can hide or show passwords by clicking on them. After installing the software you will be prompted to enter the directory where all passwords are stored. An empty password database will be created. The Password Trapper also has the ability to view the details of an individual password. The interface is represented by a standard window with a plain and simple layout, where the passwords are immediately shown at startup. You can check out the window title and password, together with the field and process name, path and description. The paths can be searched or sorted by date. You can also export lists to other software programs, like Excel or Notepad. The Password Trapper needs a minimum of 5 GB of hard disk space and memory, and the program is not recommended for systems with low memory. A demo version is available that allows you to examine the software in action. The Password Trapper has not caused any problems in our tests, but you might want to note that we could not try out the software's hidden file encryption feature. The program retrieves all passwords from local or network drives, and tries to match the password with the user name of the login and the computer name. To use the software for local drives, choose the Drive button to install the utility. When running the program, you can configure the individual passwords from the main window, where you can set the priority, whether to show or hide passwords, remove duplicated entries, view the date and so on. The final priority is automatically matched with the first entry found, so you need not worry about manually classifying your passwords. Once you have set the password, you can select whether to save it as a new password or a recovery one. The PasswordRecovery option saves the new password so the user can see it on future logins. The final step is to remove the password that has been retrieved. To use the program for
