I was in Harlem yesterday. Never been there before. Loved the place. Walked through Central Park. Loved the Museum of Natural History. We walked the High Line and visited MoMA as well. It was fabulous. I also wanted to see Harlem Cheese Shop but it was closed, turned out to be pizza. Almost back to Brooklyn anyway so good to find an interesting place to eat. Are there good ethnic food places in the Western part of the city? I've never been to Harlem; I used to live around the corner from it, and I remember a nice little Italian place being there. But a pizza place? I would've expected that to be over here. Carmine's, the famous Italian food place, was in the Western suburb.

Mimi's i too been there. I do agree with you that, as it happens, Harlem has food worth eating and good ethnic food. I remember going there many times while living there. I have never been to Harlem Cheese Shop. I stopped there once and they were shutting down. I don't know if they are still open but I would try the one on Amsterdam Avenue. I don't know if there are any others. I think there was one in the Sunset Park area, where Avenue J meets 36th. They close before it gets too late and it is quite easy to find. I remember that there was also an Ethiopian place in Greenpoint where I used to go many times when I lived there. I would say that as far as ethnic food is concerned, a couple of places in Western Brooklyn near Avenue X are worth checking out if that's where you are: Kwanzaa near 130, Cokie's Ethiopian near 207. There is also quite a good

Spanish place in Great Neck called La Paz.
