multimedia stuff. But it doesn't support some codecs as JPEG, MP3, AVI, AAC, etc. You should add the function to support these codecs. It is easy to modify, follow the instruction at the docs. This invention relates to the identification of the fermion number of a particle. More particularly, the invention relates to the determination of the sign of the fermion number of a particle by its angular momentum projection. In a theoretical system, the type of fermion number a particle has can be easily determined by examining the particle's angular momentum projection. Specifically, if a particle's angular momentum projection is greater than zero the particle is an unpaired (or lowest component) fermion, and if it is smaller than zero the particle is a paired (or highest component) fermion. The determination of a particle's angular momentum projection is both rapid and simple for both electrons and protons. The method of probing the angular momentum of a particle using the non-conservation of the z-component of its angular momentum is well known to those skilled in the art. One such application of this technique is for determining the spin of an electron in an atomic transition to be used in the inversion method of nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR). The atomic transition method of NMR is primarily used for determining the quantum numbers of protons in molecules. It is also well known that a hydrogen atom is defined by the allowed set of orbital angular momentums,  $n=1, 2, \dots$  and all values of  $n$  are
