HyperMotion gives players unparalleled control of fast-paced, non-passing soccer matches. Using the new techniques, players can now kick the ball quickly and precisely with more skill while attacking or defending, earn more headers, and tackle the ball with greater force. This evolution will deliver a new level of realism and exciting gameplay experiences on the pitch. While the Digital Activation version of FIFA 22 will be available to play at major retail stores, gamers can pre-download the complete "Create-A-Player" experience on August 28th. Update: The file size of the game is approximately 32GB and 25GB for the Datalogic/Aimpoint version. Patch 10: Players like Player 16 in the video below are true new and improved. As shown in the video, players can now do horizontal slices as they chase the ball. They can also perform vertical slices when they are attacking the ball, as you saw in a live stream above. FIFA has always been great at providing custom faces and skins for their game based on your favorite players. Since the last couple of years, we have seen minor tweaks here and there, but FIFA 22 is definitely one of the most advanced and well-thought-out custom packs in the game. At the end of the preview, you can see player 17, who is incredibly close to the style of Player 16 that was showcased in the game. Another new feature, player-individual skills and player-team skills, are essential to FIFA 22. FIFA 22 player-individual skills includes "volley shot," "bicycle kick," "fancy heading," and "angle heading." We've also got Player-Team skills, such as, "clearance," "support" and "sack." Update: Players 13, 14, and 15 are a nice combination of Player 13's unique skills for defending and Player 15's unique abilities for attacking. Update 2: Some players are created from the ground up. For instance, Player 16 is based on Player 6 in the video above. The player in the above video looked amazingly similar to Player 6, but it's a whole new "on par" version. Update 3: There were parts of the video where we saw Player 12 from the video above. Note: The demo version, version beta, and the retail version of FIFA
