Obsessive compulsive disorder: a review of pharmacotherapy. Recent literature reviews and clinical trials have examined the efficacy of pharmacotherapy in the treatment of obsessive compulsive disorder. Controlled clinical trials have confirmed the efficacy of clomipramine, fluvoxamine, fluoxetine, zimelidine, methylphenidate, lithium, and bupropion in the treatment of obsessive compulsive disorder. The benefits of such medications are well-established for treatment-resistant cases, whilst the role of these agents in the treatment of non-resistant cases requires further exploration. Recent evidence has indicated that normalization of the distribution of fast-off-rate 5-HT_{1B} receptors in the frontal cortex of patients with obsessive compulsive disorder is associated with the long-term antidepressant efficacy of antidepressants with high 5-HT_{1B} receptor-binding affinities. Clinical trials are in progress, and some trials are approaching completion, with atypical antipsychotic medications that are effective in the treatment of obsessive compulsive disorder. Antidepressant and anxiolytic medications with high 5-HT_{1B} receptor-binding affinities are good candidates for further investigation as adjunctive or monotherapy for obsessive compulsive disorder.

Email | MORE! PHOENIX -- It was the opener of the state high school basketball tournament, and Chris Armstead thought the game was well in hand for his Lincoln-Way East team. His team entered the Crispus Attucks gym and took the floor and their opponents were no match for the Lincoln-Way juggernaut. It was easy for the upperclassmen to do what they were told, the coach said, but the sophomore group did not have the skill. Armstead thought his team should have won the game. But as quickly as the game ended for his team, it started for the Phoenix Union High School District. On March 19 in the Maricopa County Attorney's office, before a panel of three judges, the Lincoln-Way East assistant basketball coach was found to have violated the student athlete code of conduct. The three-year coach was suspended for six years by Superintendent Michael Hanson. Armstead's punishment was only half that long -- three years, but

An expansion joint is typically installed between the subsea production facility and the wellhead. The expansion joint is used to absorb thermal expansion and contraction of the trunkline that occurs during production flow. The expansion joint and/or subsea production facility may be provided with a subsea female receptacle at a wellhead of the production flow that secures the trunkline. The subsea female receptacle is configured to receive a corresponding male connector of a manifold. The manifold may be fluidly connected to a connection structure that is coupled to a subsea tubular. An annular space may be formed between the male connector of the manifold and the female receptacle of the subsea production facility. The annular space is normally filled with a lubricant such as, for example, a liquid or a gel. During installation, the male connector of the manifold is inserted into the female receptacle of the subsea production facility in order to provide a fluid tight seal between the male connector and the female receptacle. Due to factors such as, for example, pressure, temperature, and corrosive conditions, the male connector may expand and contract relative to the female receptacle. However, the male connector and/or female receptacle may not be thermally isolated from the subsea trunkline or any other components coupled to the subsea trunkline. Accordingly, the
