Many investigations have focused on the risk of organ donors falling into the so-called "injury state." This is defined as a hypotensive or unstable patient with a depressed level of consciousness, either anoxic or traumatic brain injury, or a prolonged post-operative period in the intensive care unit. Our objective is to assess a new metabolic index, consisting of the serum level of creatine phosphokinase (CPK), blood lactate and coagulation factors, as a means to predict donor injury and allow early interventions. A total of 41 organ donors were studied between December 2000 and October 2001; among them, the injuries were observed in 3 donors and all of them received donor kidneys, with 1 kidney lost. The risk of injury was higher in the first hour after donation (2/23, 8.7%) than in the following hours (2/18, 11.1%) (P=NS). The risks of injury and death among "injury risk donors" were 15.4% (3/19) and 10.5% (2/19) respectively. Further analysis showed that the risk of injury and death was associated with donor age (P=0.027), use of aspirin (P=0.017) and intra-operative hypotension (P=0.017). A receiver operating characteristic (ROC) curve to assess the clinical accuracy of the metabolic index showed that the overall sensitivity for predicting injury was 69%, the specificity was 66%, the positive predictive value was 75% and the negative predictive value was 57%.Paul Pogba's 1cdb36666d
