I have a list of movie files formatted like above, and the print() method prints the first line of each file. When I use the IDLE 3.3.8 python shell it prints the first two lines of each file (no problem), but when I run the script as a exe file, only the first line prints (no problem). What's the issue? A: It looks like the problem is that the separator character is a newline, but you aren't telling print to think of the strings as being delimited by newlines. Since strings are all newlines in Python, print will pass in the string as a single line. If you can't change the input file to be more delimited, you could fix it by calling print on each string in a loop instead of relying on print to know where one string ends and the next begins: for line in input: print(line) Also, you can use file.readlines() instead of an explicit list comprehension to build a list from an open file. Tolerance and detrimental effects of morphine and methadone on different functions of the brain stem. Subcortical structures of the brain are affected by drugs of abuse. The opioid activity of drugs such as heroin and methadone swell documented. Since both drugs are prescribed for relief of heroin abuse, it is essential to test tolerance and physiological effects on the brain stem, which is a target site for both drugs. The Swiss albino rats received escalating doses of methadone (METH), 5 mg/kg per day, or 5 days. One week after the drug treatment (D7), in an open field, the locomotor activity (activity days) and the number of rearing days. In a hot plate apparatus, the latency to show the first hind-paw lick or a hind-paw withdrawal was measured. In electroencephalography (EEG) recording, the total number of waves and the total wave amplitudes were recorded for the quiet rest condition and the visual stimulation condition, respectively. Data on the objective and subjective signs of drug dependence were also analyzed by correlating with the plasma concentrations of the drugs. In methadone-treated animals, both the number of total act
