Archives "I wanna be adopted by a loving family!!!" via ABC News Published on June 10, 2012 This is my granddaughter of five years named, Giselle. And she's 5 years old. And she's been with me since day one, she was born with short gut syndrome. And she just had a little over a year ago, this March 3rd of 2011 she was put on the stomach surgery. And she needed more surgeries and more follow-ups and check-ups and doctor visits. And then in April and May of last year, then I found out that her heart is beating about 7 beats per minute. But she's on medication. It's just like 3 beats a minute, right now it's about 4 beats a minute. But I figured out that she's probably going to keep getting bigger because she's 5 and she's already 5 feet tall. So it's probably gonna be like 5 feet something. And the doctors say she's gonna be like four feet tall. And the biggest thing I wanna know is what the heck is gonna happen when she's 15 years old? Or when she's 18, 20, 25, 30, 35. She's gonna have to keep on taking so many pills. Like, I don't wanna know how it's gonna turn out. But I wanna be adopted by a loving family, somebody that's willing to give her all the love, somebody that's willing to love her and take care of her the way she needs to be taken care of. Someone that's willing to help her through the ups and downs of life, someone that's willing to help her through life. And I don't think I could do that by myself. I couldn't do that by myself. But I need to adopt her and I would want her to have a loving home with somebody that's gonna be there for her, somebody that will be there for her, even if that's doing no chores around the house, somebody that's willing to be there for her, even if it's just a 3-minute hug at night. I really do love her. When she first came home I was like, damn I don't want to put my family through this

If you do, keep reading. If you don't, well, I'm not sure what you're doing here. Oh. You're here to read Part 1 of our survey. Which means you've made it into this discussion. That's a good first step. You're definitely interested in more ideas. For the rest of you, let's get started: This is the second in a series of posts we're writing, based on research for an upcoming conference at the White House Strategy Group. Next week we'll post Part 3, which is all about what you want to see. 1) Communications professors we talked to stressed that one of the most important steps any internal communications plan has to take is to map out the communication channels that will be most effective at getting the messages that you want your employees to hear across your organization. This is called mapping the communication network. No surprises here. As Scott McNealy once said, you only have one chance to make a first impression. And what better way to project confidence and get their attention than to create a buzz by allowing your people to talk about the positive outcomes of your initiatives before they've even gotten off the ground. Of course, if you've got a team that you're trying to communicate with, all that buzz won't do you any good if they don't know that it's coming. So you want to highlight your sources of confidence. For many companies, this means creating a message that they can use to communicate in the right places within the company and with the right people. Here's the important part: The communication channel that you choose to start with should correspond with the need that you identify in your business strategy. If your strategy is to be an industry innovator, then your first message to the world about what you're all about has to be in the forms of press releases and articles where the other people in the industry that matter are reading. If you're looking to generate awareness and interest, online is probably the most effective place to start. It's where your target market is, and it's where most of them are spending their time. And here's something important to note for many of you: If you're going to communicate online, you need to choose the medium
