The movable platen, or header, is a steel slab held in place by the press body, and the stationary platen, or head, is a steel slab held in place by the framing. The platen thickness and the sliding blocks are usually measured, and the side gages and the slide plate are then installed and connected with gage pins and bolts. The platen of the press is supported in a recess formed in the framing and in the head or base plate. The platen is usually bedded in the recess on three sides, usually around the periphery of the head. But the bedding in the head is not considered a part of the head. The bedding is a steel beam, mounted in the framing and bedded in the recess in the head. The bedding, in the framing, which supports the head, is a nutted beam with steel plates at each end. At each end, the steel plates have an axial lug or flange extending through a nut. The head is mounted in the recess in the framing with bolts that pass through the head and the bedding beam and are received in the nuts to retain the head in position. The back gage is mounted on the cross gage with a small setscrew. The head is pivoted to move from end to end with the movable gage, which is pivoted on the head. The back gage is moved in a straight line parallel to the ram at the head. was raised to a Defense Post in an attempt to prevent the "Intelligence" inspired Pueblo incident, and immediately prior to the Taipei Incident, the Presidential Security Command (PSC) was expanded to reactivate the Defense Post
