In this article, I'm going to explain how to create a high-quality stylized face using easy-to-follow steps and creative tips. We'll use a real photo of a model for source material, but after this tutorial you could use this approach to edit a photo of your own. Edit Your Own Face Before starting, the model's face will need to be cropped out of the image. We will use a rectangular marquee selection to cut off the face of the model. The area of the face we're going to work with is 1) the model's face and eyebrows and 2) a small area surrounding the face. We're going to start with 1) to protect our original photo from unnecessary changes. Step 1: Open a high-quality photo of a friend or yourself Begin by opening a high-quality photo of a friend or yourself. Create a new, full-sized image with 1920×1080 pixels at 300dpi. Step 2: Save for web in a high-quality format Choose Web from the Image Size menu. Click Save for Web in a high-quality format. You should see a dialog like the one below. Step 3: Copy a rectangular area Copy a rectangular area by using the Rectangular marquee tool. Move to a new layer and create a new, full-sized image with a resolution of 1920×1080 pixels at 300dpi. Step 4: Select the area with the Marquee tool Use the Marquee tool (T) to select the area with the face and eyebrows. The selected area must be at least one pixel wide. Make sure you're inside the image you're editing. Click once on a new layer below the first layer. Step 5: Cut out the face Paste the selection (Ctrl+V) on the new layer and deselect (Ctrl+D). Ctrl+T (invert selection) to invert the selection. Click the Clone Stamp tool (S) and remove the face. Step 6: Replace skin Use the Spot Healing Brush tool (B) to paint a custom skin over the place where the face used to be. I removed a few areas where the skin was damaged but generally a few spots won't make much of a difference. Step 7: Clone a small area Copy a small area by using the marquee tool and cut out the area surrounding the face. Paste the selection on a new layer 05a79cecff

Post navigation SHOPMATE #27: A FUN AND FAST RIDE Sunsets are my favorite time of year, but this week's Shopmate brings me some unexpected pleasure as well. I'm honored to join in the #27SunsetChallenge by Maureen Johnson. She's one of my favorite authors, and I had high hopes for her latest picture book: Time to Sunset. Her career has been a steady ascent since the publication of Three Times Lucky, which I might add is my all-time favorite picture book, and one that's inspired me to want to write more picture books myself. So the idea of a sunset picture book was irresistible. But what I hadn't expected is the charm and fun that Maureen embodies while still telling a good story. Her prose is captivating and her characters are real. The story begins with a young man teaching his sister how to make a sundae. It's a heartwarming story of acceptance, brotherly love, and acceptance again. The heart of the story, however, is the unexpected ride to the beach with their dog. As they soar along the highway, the boy doesn't know what to expect. When they pull up to a beautiful beach, even he is surprised. It's a fun, fast story that's less about kids and more about joy in life and acceptance. I truly enjoyed the ride to the beach, and I hope that kids will enjoy it, too. Time to Sunset by Maureen Johnson Illustrated by Daniel Hayes Written by Maureen Johnson Let the beginner, beginner skill be conveyed in a way that is equally enjoyable, and let the expert, expert skill be conveyed in a way that is enjoyable." – Pierre Bayard, French philosopher It's a new family tradition at the beach. It's a new family tradition to go to the beach in the cooler months. Just like the weather, the time has changed. It's a new family tradition to have ice cream on the beach. Especially with a new baby in the family. Everything is changing. Everything they are used to. The youngest brother, often given to being absent, finds himself, for once, sharing his childhood memories with his sisters. And learning. And loving. And helping.

What's New In?

A Vision for What's Coming in December This is a terrible time to be an East Coast city with a national/global spotlight on it. You know, the East Bay / San Francisco Bay Area, especially San Jose. Yes, it's my home. And I must admit, it is a very real concern of mine that the Bay Area that has produced so many of the great innovators of Silicon Valley, will be viewed only as another LA or NY and not viewed as a revolutionary place. But if one walks (or flies) around Silicon Valley you'll see the presence of truly great companies, and brilliant minds. Companies like Facebook, Apple and Oracle; or Google and Yahoo. Now, the EU, along with a few of the Northeastern states, wants to take the EU-US trade deal (TTIP), make it so that foreign firms (American or European) can now have privileges in the US that they can't have anywhere else in the world. This would be on top of the recent extension of free trade agreement between the EU and South Korea. So here's what the EU wants to do: Allow foreign firms to sue US governments for a huge sum of money. Or to say "we want more companies to come to the EU, but the EU also wants to restrict these particular companies from coming to the US." It's like an arms race. We all know what happened with Roe V. Wade, North Korea and the death of George Bush's war in Iraq. It could be the next world wide pandemic. It could be global war. Or it could be just a global version of the types of things that made the last 20 years of the 20th century so horrible. You'd think that the European Union would get how the working class is so dependent on the US. How the combined GDP of these countries is responsible for $3.7 trillion dollars of the world's GDP. But they don't seem to know that the US is on its way to becoming a second-tier economic power in the next few decades. The EU is just lost in the clouds. But will the US want to save the EU from itself? Already, the EU wants to insert their own government into the US medical system.Q: Textarea resizing and scrolling doesn't work on IE I am trying to create a web design that looks good on IE I am trying to create a web design that looks good on IE in a web app, and am having some trouble with it.
