Roblox is a user-generated virtual construction toy and video game website and a virtual world designed for user-generated content. The website was founded by brothers David and Erik Cassel as a place for children to create their own games, known as "robuxomen". Children on the site use games to earn Robux, which are used to purchase virtual items and services. Roblox uses a game engine that supports user-created games of many genres, such as platformers, racing games, and role-playing games. Many notable educational and social games are released on Roblox. Roblox has been called a "virtual playground", "edutainment" and a "sandbox game". The initial

Roblox website was released in September 2006, and the website is free to use, allowing children to build virtual games, buy virtual items, and use Robux. The website provides additional features such as a virtual chat, a virtual 3D viewer, and a virtual world with a virtual currency and collection of in-game items called "Builders Club". Roblox uses a modification of the Forge programming language to program games. Games are hosted on the Roblox website. Roblox's virtual world allows people to explore locations, play games, communicate with other Roblox users, and create games. Roblox's programming language allows users to create games in a variety of genres. The initial version of Roblox allowed users to create games with a Kinect, if available, and the website's functionality was expanded in January 2008 to allow users to create their own games with the development kit for Microsoft's Kinect. Roblox also introduced a virtualization software in 2011 that allows users to run their games on their computers or other platforms while playing. By 2013, Roblox had grown to over two million registered users and featured around 5,000 games. In 2016, Roblox was valued at $1.13 billion, making it one of the most valuable independent companies in the United States. As of 2019, the Roblox website has over 164 million monthly active users. More than 45 percent of American children use Roblox. Although several parents have expressed concerns about the website's content, Roblox states that it takes responsible use of the website and strives to keep the website's content age-appropriate. On April 7, 2016, the Roblox Corporation signed a $400 million investment deal with Google's subsidiary company, GV, to create mixed-reality

Position-aware video tagging using conditional regression networks. We propose a simple, yet versatile approach for joint semantic and temporal segmentation of videos by learning position-aware relationships between segments from a single instance of input video. We utilize a framework that encodes coarse position information through simple high level predictions and applies a suite of semi-supervised learning objectives to refine coarse predictions. We show that our method is competitive, outperforming both baseline techniques on several popular benchmarks. We further demonstrate that the learned positions can be used to generate segmentations with improved precision.
