I've got a perl script that call a Bash script to convert XML to CSV. I've tried to insert two lines which should check, whether the script is being called from the bash file. It seems like the script checks itself, because it runs, but it doesn't check if it is being called from the bash file. Excerpt from the bash file: #!/bin/bash if [[ -z $1 ]] then echo "You've to specify a XML file" exit 1 else $1 | xml2csv fi Excerpt from the perl script: print "you've run the perl script from the Bash script"; A: Write your Perl script to follow the "subroutine" pattern, as shown below: #!/usr/bin/perl sub initial { print "Hi there, you've run the Perl script from the Bash script "; } #... initial(); (Remember that to call a Perl subroutine via a C-level declaration, a special extension
