package for a python script fails to install in Ubuntu Here is the script: As you can see it is a small and simple tool that can restore devices in a fast mode but I am having some issues with how it is packaged (Ubuntu 18.04 in this case). My source code is correctly built and the deb package is correctly built. I made it using the instructions in A hard requirement is that these packages must be installed through apt. I tried to install it using the command `$ sudo dpkg -i rad*.deb` but it fails with an error message. Output The following packages have unmet dependencies: rad : Depends: python3-numpy ( $\geq 1.12.0$ ) but it is not installable E: Unable to correct problems, you have held broken packages. And nothing is installed. The python3-numpy is installed, as I can clearly see it in the pip list, as well as python3-scipy. `$ sudo pip3 install -U pip` `pip3 install -U scipy` The python3-scipy is installed. What is wrong? P.S. I tried to use the deb build option as described in but it seems to fail in several different ways, probably due to any of the 6d1f23a050
