Investigators from the Center for Community Health Partnerships and the University of Colorado Denver Cancer Center propose to apply a sequential prospective, randomized controlled trial design to evaluate the impact of Veterans Administration (VA) and community primary health care centers on access to community cancer services. Primary care patients (older than 18 years) with a new cancer diagnosis will be identified from two VA systems in the Denver metropolitan area (18,000 patients) and the Denver Health system (5,000 patients). Using state cancer registry data, 40 cases will be randomly assigned to an intervention group (primary care centers will interact with a trained cancer navigator who will identify and obtain referrals for community care resources) or a control group (primary care centers do not interact with a trained cancer navigator). The study will evaluate four research questions regarding the impact of a VA-community cancer care coordination partnership on patients' knowledge of community cancer care services, satisfaction with the VA, the number of referrals from the VA to community services, and the quality of care received (i.e., the percent of individuals received follow-up care within 6 months after the VA visit). The study will be evaluated using both survey data collected at baseline and the conclusion of the study and by tracking service use. Helena Webchat Have Questions About the Past?
