However, I don't really know how to proceed. More specifically, how can I build a Scapy tool with a main() function in the C programming language? And how does this (main()) function interact with the normal Scapy functions and/or with the network interface? I am not a C programmer, so I apologize in advance if this question was stupid. Edit: I managed to get the program working with a small Python program that implements the network interface.

def main(argv): global conn if len(argv)!= 2: print 'error' sys.exit(-1) conn.send(Packet()) if __name__ == "__main__": import sys if len(sys.argv)!= 2: print 'error' sys.exit(-1) main(sys.argv[1])

 The above code is a minimal example that compiles fine. However, I still don't know how to work with the Scapy library. A: The easiest approach would be to simply use the Python interpreter and wrap the network traffic in scapy packets. This is exactly what I've done in recent development for my own project, and really works well. Another approach is to write a Scapy library that can run under a multitude of operating systems, but the difficulty in this is such that it is practically out of scope for this Q&A series. My recommendation would be

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for testing a semiconductor chip to be mounted on a multi-pin multi-purpose testing apparatus, and the multi-pin multi-purpose testing apparatus using the testing method. 2. Description of the Related Art A testing method called Joint Test Action Group (JTAG) has recently been in widespread use. This method is designed for designing test pads on a semiconductor chip in consideration of the function, layout, and the like of an external device (typically, a chip is collectively called a "device under test" or a "DUT"), and is not a test method for testing a semiconductor chip directly in use. This method includes a step for inputting an arbitrary control signal to be applied to the DUT by the external device, and a step for checking whether or not the DUT is normal by allowing the control signal to be transferred from the external device and then analyzing the result thereof. JTAG enables the DUT to be controlled and observed externally using a tester, and thus has been widely used in a debugging step for example after the completion of the manufacturing step. In recent years, multi-layered wiring technology for stacking a plurality of semiconductor chips and a plurality of semiconductor packages in a single semiconductor device has been actively developed. This makes it possible to achieve a reduction in the size of a semiconductor device, to increase the number of semiconductor devices mounted on a mother board or the like, and to improve the mountability of a semiconductor device on a mother board. In contrast to the foregoing, the JTAG function described above is provided for the semiconductor device mounted on a mother board. In the case of a large-scale semiconductor device having a plurality of semiconductor chips stacked therein, if the JTAG function is provided for each semiconductor chip, the number of pins for use in the JTAG function increases in proportion to the number of semiconductor chips. This results in a problem that the size of the device increases.Nina Feenstra Nina Feenstra (born 20 June 1974) is a Dutch classical pianist. She has performed 6d1f23a050
