I know I'm bad, but the reason I came into "Help" was because I mistakenly thought this place was still open. I am most worried about the fact that my right hand was in a sling and that my left hand is numb. Part of the accident was due to my old hulk strength, getting tangled up in the hardware and coming to a complete stop on the edge of a three-meter-high metal shelf. I am ashamed, but I should not worry because a cousin of mine saw it happen.

A: You say, "... my right hand was in a sling..." The sling is to protect the arm, and it should be removed for work. This could be done, but since you are not in the hospital or doctor's office, there is no guarantee you won't be re-injured. If you don't have the energy to ask someone to help you remove the sling, it will be removed by someone else that knows how. It will still be removed, but you will not know that someone else did it. I'm going to assume, because of the number of people who've marked your question as a duplicate of "How do I ask a friend to help me remove my sling?", that your injury is not serious. I'd like to answer your question for myself, and ask you to focus on your comfort level - not me, not someone else, not what is safe or not safe. I ask that you do something that's safe for you. Remove the sling, but keep your wrist in a circle of motion. Your wrist should be able to move a bit, and you can even use a pillow under the forearm to raise and lower the arm a bit. Remove your other arm from the sling. If you were laid out on your back, you could get your elbow and hand placed in a position to be lifted and comfortably moved. (I have a coworker who lifted his arm this way when he had wrist-splints. He lifted his arm a little, then pulled it down to his body, then slid his forearm up and across to his other shoulder so it could be moved.) Pull down the rest of the sling. Put your arm on a table, or a chair, or something that will provide a comfortable resting position where you are comfortable putting your arm down. (Be sure that you will be able to rest your arm in this position, so you don't end up in a curled position like you were in.) 6d1f23a050
