Attached you can see the encryption is not correct for the last digit. I'm currently looking at the other stops for the second digit. I can input any number but it doesn't seem to match it. I will check again when I'm done testing. In my case, I was getting incorrect responses from my decryption; using ALL my known combinations in all three passes with my initial serial number. The first time in the lock, I was getting the correct first digit for all three locks, but no correspondence at all for the other two digits. The combination I have has two digits, so it's not a serial number. The first number is corrected, the second number is not. It's a total guess. I'm guessing that it's due to a 1 millisecond delay between the lock and the decryption attempt. If anyone cares, I ran the Simbl plugin in safe mode, and found that when Simbl loads (at which point it auto-completes the serial number), it is looking for the file "1.dll" in the plugins folder, which should be in the main Simbl installation directory. That's not an nfs shift 2 serial number hack, but it's something to try. If you can find the serial number in the registry, then you have a win. Otherwise, give up... Someone's going to have to explain the math here. It seems like you're trying to generate a valid serial number, and failing. But without knowing the internal format of the serial number of course it's impossible to explain. The simulation style, really, is certainly just a numbers game at the second; it's all about, W' v. In addition a mobile phone is less easily disposed of than this type of device. After all, the only thing that you have to do is call a number or text a number and the device is ready to go. In a home, the process is generally more cumbersome. Even a small can could be stolen from a car or thrown out of a window. In contrast, the current technology used to protect the physical devices is allways hiddn from the user and is tamperproof. Since a mobile phone can be purchased new at a very cheap price, it becomes all the more attractive to criminals if they fear the use of weapons that can be used against them. On the other hand, once you get the device working it is best to throw it away. After all, the federal government puts out a random number for a person to use every few minutes. And once it is used, it is almost impossible to get it again. I have the same problem you are having. I have no idea how you got it to work, but I have tried everything I know on my lock. My serial number is 14 15 5 98. I've changed the numbers around 5 and 6. Different colors of numbers on my dial (green, red, orange, etc) worked, none of them worked. Maybe a 8 will work? One of the hardest Locks I've ever gotten to work. I don't have a clue how you got it to work, but I have tried everything I know on my lock. My serial number is 1314 4310 47. I've tried 1443, 14 4 3, 1242, and nothing worked. Funny thing, the code you have is backwards from what I have. My numbers are in a different position on my lock. Anyway, I appreciate it. I've been at this for 5 hours straight and nothing has worked. There is no matter in my lock. All you need to know is, that lock doesn't work on my lock. So I think you figured it out.

Great job. 5ec8ef588b
