Element 3D is a free plugin for all major Adobe programs which lets you convert images of 3D models into real 3D models and to place them into your video project to create awesome 3D effects. Check out the tutorial videos on <http://www.videocopilot.net/element3d/introduction/> Getting started with the Element 3D plug-in is very easy. Simply open your image, select the 3D Model option from the File menu, enter your values in the dialogs and export the result to a ready to use 3D object. No matter if you want to add random elements with different details or a series of models to create virtual reality or animatronics, the Element 3D plug-in takes everything into account. You can even work in a loop and create a series of 3D models. A quick tutorial on how to texture a 3D model using the MNG3D Shapes panel in Element 3D. I used the MNG3D Shapes panel to customize my object's mesh shape and create textures to be used on my 3D model. That's why I decided to create the compositing sequence in the following tutorial. Using a number of ProShaders from VideoCopilot, including the Resize, Color Correction, Glow, Blur, and Screen Effects, I built up this compositing sequence from scratch. It took several hours of tweaking, trial and error, and experimentation to get the green Blob shot into the shot. In this tutorial I will show you how to combine the Element3D and Boris Xs FX plug-ins to create the flame and lightning scene we described in the intro. For this tutorial, I will use footage from the Atlas Film Company, not from a DSLR camera. We need to animate the 3D blob. The easiest way to do this is to animate the position of the 3D Element in the X position, followed by the Y position and the rotation. To do that, open the 3D Element ( found in the Shaders folder ) and add a 3D transform and a Track Matte. The Track Matte should track the 3D Element in all 3 axis (Note that the rotation of the 3D Element will not affect the Track Matte in any way). Then open the Expression panel and start animating the value of the 3D Element (either the X, Y or the Rotation property).
