the tekla structures structure modelling platform can be used for structure based bim solutions. structures are handled as geometric elements with properties like areas, volumes, deformations and any other information that you can get from a mechanical stress analysis. see some examples below.

tekla structures is one of the manysoftwares available for creating 3d models for use in bim. i will not insist that this is the best tool. it is definitely one of the leading tools for making models of steel and reinforced concrete structures. thanks to the connection with rhino 3d and grasshopper, it is possible to create parameterized models with very demanding geometries. you can learn more about this by following krzysztofs articles in the section on parametric modeling, and the effects of combining grasshopper with tekla can be found here: finally i want to tell you that you also get support for siemens nx, autodesk archicad, archicad lt, autodesk revit, bim 360, abaqus, doors, eclipse, grasshopper, navisworks, solidworks and yed. this includes support for recent versions of bim 360, openbim, archicad, autodesk revit and grasshopper and enough new features to keep you busy! this tekla structures add-on was designed to create a 3d-pdf document containing the tekla structures 3d model. the user selects either to include the whole model or just selected parts.

furthermore the user has several options to include bolts, welds and attributes to be exported. for more information, please visit our website at. sola g2 is the world's first 2d/3d structural analysis software (sas), which gives you a powerful and flexible planning and design tool for any type of structural analysis. below are some common workflows for which sola g2 is employed.
