There are many ways to add podcasts to your lesson plans. You can either listen to your podcast before the class, which may help students stay on task and on topic, or you can read the transcripts out loud to your students. These podcasts were chosen because they have been well reviewed by teachers and have strong audio quality. By listening and reading to your podcast's transcripts, you will not only help students prepare for your class but also allow them to get a taste of your pedagogy, by listening or reading your teaching methods. You could even have students discuss the podcasts while working on homework. Although some podcasts may not be appropriate for a classroom setting, we encourage you to use podcasts in teaching. There are many additional benefits to listening to podcasts, as well. For example, many professors now record lecture videos. They make these videos available to students for free, via their course website. However, it is still time-consuming to create each video, and it is nearly impossible to keep video accurate for audio comprehension. Podcasts, on the other hand, are created for audio and thus, can be easily and quickly made available for students. There are many benefits to making podcasts for students. For one, they are free and accessible. They also have a fresh perspective. Podcasts are, by their nature, interactive. By listening to podcasts, students are more likely to focus more on the class material and material they find relevant to them and their lives. Students learn more and retain more content through podcasts than through traditional lectures. Lastly, podcasts are like audio books. They are an immersive and easy way to get students interested in your ideas and teaching methods. Students who listen to podcasts are more likely to come to class and work on assignments with a greater understanding of the material.

Before heading down this route, you should at least check out a free option like Otter (listed below). This service offers a playback feature so that the AI can set a road map of the transcription out for you. Then, you can go back and make finalized corrections later. Many programs that make it possible to download the tactics in this book cost money. We think they're worth the cost, and they allow you to create your own customized editions, so we sell our own products. You can also get the tactics as MP3 files for free. But if you're looking for a more powerful, multisession version of our tactics, we also offer the non-profit Educator Edition of the lessons so that students who can't afford the cost of our products can still access our content. If you're a teacher or administrator who'd like to use the tactics in your own classroom, or if you'd like to try the tactics yourself, we're offering a special Educator Edition of the tactics. While we've spent time and money making our tactics accessible, this version is made for teachers who have a lot of experience with teaching, and it may not include as much explanation or examples as the Student Edition. The Student Edition of the tactics is what you need to get started teaching the content in the books. This version of the tactics includes all of the content in the Student Book, but it's organized into lessons. So, if you're new to teaching the content, you can start by learning the lessons one by one as you find them. This edition also comes with a variety of leveled materials for each lesson, to make the process of working through the material easier. 5ec8ef588b
