Since we're basically 100% done with it we've started working on the second game. We're still a little early in the process so we're not really sure what we'll end up doing. We've decided to work on this for the time being, and will work on the second game at a later date. Comments Do you feel like you need to change your game too much in order to appeal to the bigger community? I'm sure that like me you have games that you want to release, but you know that it will be a struggle to appeal to the more general audience. I'm talking about the love of game development for the sake of it. I mean, some people seem to love making games and others seem to enjoy just playing them. So in your eyes there is a difference between making games and just making games? What about it does this make a difference? That is a hard question to answer without knowing what kind of games you want to release. It is really hard to judge how people will like a game, especially if you are not a typical game player. Some people may not like the same kind of things that I do. In any case, if the plan is to just make a new game anyway and try to get it out there, I think that it is not going to be that hard to try to get people to like it. Also, this is a good reason to start

"We expect high temperatures, a risk of flash floods and strong winds," the Met Office warned. It followed heavy rain in the west of England and heavy hail in parts of Wales, Yorkshire and the Midlands yesterday. The Environment Agency issued a flood alert for the River Severn, warning the river is "about two metres above flood level". Some people were forced to evacuate their homes. Fire crews were called out to deal with a blaze that broke out at an oil depot in south-west London. Firefighters said they saw a "fireball" coming out of the industrial site before it erupted into flames. Police said there was no danger to the general public.
