The Snitch ..world Updated: Feb 17, 2017 20:32 IST The world's industrial production increased at its fastest pace in nearly four years in December, driven by rising activity in China and other fast-growing economies, a sign manufacturers are cautiously seeking to avert a slowdown. Manufacturing grew 5% month-on-month in December, up from a 3.2% rise in November, official data showed on Tuesday. That was the fastest pace of growth since June 2013. Demand for consumer goods picked up, with growth in Asia's most important economies, led by China, unexpectedly accelerating. But the pace of expansion in the European Union, which makes up just over half of world trade, slowed less than expected. "The construction of major new plants in China has a huge impact on the global economy. The latest data demonstrates that the world's largest economy is expanding at the fastest pace in nearly six years. This is all positive news for the global economy," said Alexander Moore, chief economist at Australian bank Commonwealth Bank. "The recent sudden upswing in manufacturing growth is probably quite temporary as new investment projects start to enter their later stages of construction," he said. The pickup in global trade, as measured by two major trade surveys, points to a gradual recovery in economic activity as global central banks 04aeff104c
