.Seasonal variation in plasma corticosterone and gonadotropin levels in the European eel (Anguilla anguilla). In this study, we analyzed the pituitary-thyroid axis as well as plasma corticosterone and gonadotropin levels of male and female European eels at several times of the year. Compared to previous studies, the plasma estradiol-17beta (E(2)) concentration determined in this study, was lower than levels reported for American eels. Plasma thyroxine (T(4)) and triiodothyronine (T(3)) levels decreased and plasma thyrotropin (TSH) levels remained relatively constant during the experiment. Plasma luteinizing hormone (LH), follicle stimulating hormone (FSH) and E(2) levels changed seasonally. Plasma LH and E(2) levels showed similar seasonal fluctuations. In the winter, plasma FSH was undetectable, but was present during spring and summer and lowest in autumn. These results suggest that eels have a rythmical way of responding to annual changes in environmental factors such as photoperiod and temperature. 335 S.C. 623 (1999) 524 S.E.2d 664 *The STATE, Respondent, v.
