He's already more comfortable with his shtick and a little bit more confident." This is a bit of an easy question to answer because Pathology is a gimmick based anime. We are yet to see a character grow as much as Kudo Hiroshi has over the course of the two seasons. "My character is absolutely there to help Kudo Hiroshi. He's been working so hard to prove people wrong over the course of the series. He's definitely stronger than he was in the first series. He's already more comfortable with his shtick and a little bit more confident." That is definitely true. I find his harsh confidence, counter-punching, and constant anxiety and reminding people of himself disturbing. I like that it's not shown as a weakness or some sort of convoluted technique. He actually punches a guy because he's stupid and on a dare. So sad. This series is the sum of all my hopes for an anime, and it's about to go out like a whimper. It looks like it's going to culminate in a last minute laugh of all laughs, not unlike this thread. So sad.
