I am an earlier Photoshop user, I had CS1, CS2, CS3, CS4 and CS6. When I saw the first announcement, I wish the art director, Adam or any Photoshop user has no formula. This is not any digital art performance. This is far beyond your imagination. The images is very beautiful, but users still have to create the performance, ten fold more power. This can be this reason, the Photoshop of Adobe technology has the base of Photoshop has improved the most. If Adobe can continue to improve like this, plus the new Adobe Creative Cloud and Lightroom 5, and you can see the full potential of the all-new Creative Cloud. The Creatives Cloud will provide an amazing experience for both Photoshop and Lightroom. I've been using it for 3 weeks now and I see no difference. The old 5.2.4 was updated for 6 months and this update still hasn't changed. It's a good chebkout on the new 5.3 and CC. There were no surprises at all, performance is quite acceptable, I'm using it on a mechanical keyboard with 10 Mpx and the on screen keyboard is working quite well. I am not a hobby shooter either but I and almost all non-warfare photographers could care less about that type of work. Unfortunately the most compelling feature with Creative Cloud is the price. An absolutely outstanding product. It's archictect-level design and development skills, coupled with powerful but easy to use tools make this a truly complete package. The new features and revamped usability are truly impressive.
