Typically, when you use Photoshop, you will not work in just one image at a time, but instead work on several or many images at once. So, in that sense, Photoshop is a content creation tool rather than just a photo editor. This is a great way to work with images because you can always keep individual parts of an image separate to change, or create new ones, and have them re-appear later in the design in a different part of the image. So, if you are creating a logo, you can change the text later on in the design. This will help you to save time and effort. The first thing that you can do is start editing: adding, deleting, or adjusting any of the changes made by the in-built capabilities of Photoshop.
